METHODOLOGICAL EXPLANATIONS

While using the census data, it should be noted that there is no total comparability of definitions of permanent or total population between the 2002 Census and earlier censuses. In the Censuses of 1971, 1981 and 1991, apart from the population in the country, the Yugoslav citizens temporarily working abroad, as well as the family members residing with them were included in the permanent population.

According to the international recommendations, in the 2002 Census, along with the population in the country, in the composition of permanent population comprised are the Yugoslav citizens staying abroad for less than a year, as well as the foreign citizens that work or stay in our country as family members for a period longer than a year.

Just as in previous censuses, as mother tongue we anticipated the language that enumerated person spoke in early childhood, i.e. which used as prevailing when in the subject household several languages were spoken. For children under the age of 15, the reply was provided by a parent, adopter or guardian.

In the series of censuses after the World War II, the issue of religion respectively appeared in 1953, 1991 and 2002. Pursuant to constitution regulations, in the subject census also the citizens could freely express their religious affiliation, except when the children under fifteen were concerned and a parent, adopter or guardian gave the data.

In accordance with the valid constitution stipulations, in all Yugoslav censuses after the Second World War, the data on national or ethnic affiliation were obtained pursuant to free declarations of citizens, i.e. parents, adopting parents or guardians, when children under the age of ten are concerned (1948, 1953 and 1961), or those under the age of fifteen (1971, 1981, 1991 and 2002). The replies to the questions on national or ethnic affiliation were different in some modalities in several censuses.

In the 1948 Census it was proposed that Muslims of Yugoslav origins ought to give some of the following answers: »Serb-Muslim«, »Croat-Muslim« etc. or »undeclared-Muslim«, but in processing census material, »Serb-Muslims« were included into the Serbs, »Croat-Muslims« into the Croats and »Macedonian-Muslims« into the Macedonians, while »undeclared-Muslims« were categorized separately. However in introductory explanations, the Book IX of the 1948 Census (Population by nationality), simultaneously published were the data on the number of Muslims of Yugoslav ethnic origins declared as: »Serbs-Muslims«, »Croats-Muslims«, »Macedonians Muslims«, i.e. as »undeclared-Muslims«. For the persons that indicated certain regional affiliation, in the Guidelines for revision of census material it was stipulated that solution should be brought from case to case, in order to enable as adequate grouping as possible. Likewise for example, Dalmatians were included into Croats, Sumadinci into Serbs, etc., and in the »Bosnian« case, the revision was made according to the name of the person, so those persons were classified as Serbs, Croats and undeclared Muslims. In each case where the issue could not be solved according to given directions, the persons were classified into the group: »other and unknown nationalities«.

In the 1953 Census, the persons declared as Muslims, as well as the other persons of Yugoslav origins that did not declare more precisely the national affiliation, were classified as »Yugoslavs undeclared«, while for the persons of undeclared nationality that were not of Yugoslav origins, the reply was given: »undeclared nationality«. For the persons that stated their regional affiliation, the solution was: »Yugoslav undeclared«.

In the 1961 Census new modification was made relative to the group of Muslims of Yugoslav origins and consequently certain changes in the classification of national or ethnic affiliation was made. The persons of Yugoslav origins that were Muslims in the sense of national or ethnic and not religious affiliation, declared themselves as »Muslims (national or ethnic affiliation)«. In the same Census, the Yugoslav citizens that did not declare more precisely their national or ethnic affiliation were defined as >>Yugoslav, undeclared nationality<<, while for foreign citizens that did not declare themselves nationally or ethnically the provided solution was >>undeclared nationality<<. If for example Yugoslav citizens stated some regional affiliation (Hercegovac, Šumadinac and similar), they were classified into the group of >>Yugoslavs, undeclared nationality<<.

In the 1971 Census, Muslims were defined as "Muslims, national affiliation" and for the persons that declared their regional affiliation, the offered modality was >>regional affiliation declared<<.

In the 1981 Census, the persons declared as Muslims relative to affiliation to nation, nationality and ethnic group, were so defined in the final data. The same principle was applied also in the 1991 Census relative to national affiliation. The classification of population by national or ethnic affiliation in the 2002 Census, apart from the modality of Muslim offers also the modality of Bosniak.

The 1971 and 1981 Censuses are specially characterized by categorizing the population into two basic groups, i.e. »Declared national affiliation« and »Undeclared national affiliation«. The persons that did not declare their national or ethnic affiliation in the 1971 Census were classified into three subgroups: 1. Wholly undeclared, as per Article 41, the Constitution of SFRY, 2. Declared as Yugoslavs and 3. Declared regional affiliation. In the 1981 Census 1981 also three subgroups appeared: 1. Undeclared, according to Article 170, the Constitution of SFRY, 2. Declared as Yugoslavs and 3. Declared regional affiliation. Such classification enabled us, in accordance with constitutional stipulations, to determine the number of persons that did not declare or state their national affiliation, as well as the number of citizens declared as Yugoslavs. In the final data of the 1991 Census relative to the FR Yugoslavia and the 2002 Census relative to the Republic of Serbia, Yugoslavs are stated directly following the Serbs and the Montenegrins, whereby they are excluded from the group of »Undeclared national affiliation«.

In the 1991 Census, the classification of national, i.e. ethnic affiliation was extended by introducing the modalities: Bunjevac, Egyptian and Šokac and in the 2002 Census by introducing also the modalities: Aškalija, Bosnjak, Goranac and Cincarin.

In this book we publish the data on the majority of ethnic communities on the territory of Serbia, i.e. on the ethnic communities with the number of members over 2000. However the document tables provided by the Statistical Office of the Republic of Serbia will also include the data on ethnic communities with less than 2000 members.

As in the previous Censuses, in the 2002 Census the data on age are shown by whole years of life and for children under one year of age, by whole months. So, for example, a person that was 34 years and 11 months old in the moment of census was classified into the age group 30-34 years, but if he/she had been over 35 (35 and 11 months), he/she would have been in the age group 35-39 years. The data on age (as in the 1991 Census) are obtained by referring to personal identification number of citizens, with the first seven numbers relative to the date of birth (day, month and year).

In order to give as wide insight as possible to the users of census data and to provide extensive processing of census material, please find hereafter the detailed classifications of mother tongue, religion, national or ethnic affiliation and age.
